HEN the moving picture thing was a novelty pictures were taken of the Pediar Palmer-Mo-Govern fight. But the films were a failure. The first really successful attempt in this line was made in 1871 at the Corbett-Fitsimmons fight in Cargon. The pictures taken then, of course, didn't compare with modern moving plotures. When shows on the film they show so much that it was difficult to follow the action of the fighters and the strain on the eyes of the spectators was tarrific. But those pictures made a fortune for every one who held a slice. In the State of Illinois alone the receipts.

Frank Mantell of Pawtucket, R. L. clearly cutchassed Larry English of Watervilet before the Grogan A. C. Mantell displayed far superior ring generalship, and his clever work at in-fighting had English worried through-

Mantell had the better of every round but the first, third and eighth, English having a shade of the first and third, while the eighth, in which each man landed several victous swings, was a draw. Mantell nearly closed English's right eye by short left hooks delivered while fighting close, and at the close of the bout the Watervilet slugger was plainly distressed.
